Dear Provost Regehr and Vice-President Hannah-Moffat,

I write today on behalf of some 7,000 Education Workers employed by the Toronto District School Board to implore you not to put our former students - many of whom are now your students and/or your employees - through yet another arduous strike.

Times have changed.

Fair employment, job security, appropriate funding and compensation are all accepted values and principles in society in general.

Canada's top university should be leading the academic sector in this regard and certainly should not short-change its researchers. Canada's top university should be leading the academic sector in providing for and/or improving support for mental health challenges facing its workers.

My Members – teachers, occasional teachers, psychologists, social workers, speech and language pathologists and many more who make up the education team that work hard with thousands of youth on a daily basis do so always with the hope that when they arrive in the world of academia and the working world that they will be treated fairly and with respect. We urge you to do just that. Don't force another strike. Recognize the times. Settle a fair deal now.

Sincerely,

Leslie Wolfe
